Rules of the Game

1. The goal

Each team is made up of three players: two clue-givers and one guesser. The clue-givers see a word on the screen and have to get their teammate to say it out loud, without ever showing it to them. The team that guesses the most words within the time limit wins.

2. How to give a clue

This is the rule that makes the game what it is:

- The clue-givers speak one word each, strictly alternating: first one, then the other, then back to the first, and so on.
- You may never say two words in a row, and you may never skip your turn.
- The guesser, on the other hand, can talk freely and make as many attempts as they like.

3. What you cannot say

A clue is invalid if it contains:

- the word to be guessed, even only part of it (for backpack you may say neither back nor pack);
- a word sharing the same root, or any derivative of it (for jealousy you may not say jealous);
- its translation into another language;
- spelling it out, giving the first letter, the number of syllables, or any other reference to how the word is written.

Gestures, noises and sound effects do not count as words and are not allowed: the game is played with your voice only.

4. Scoring and time

- Each team gets 60 seconds.
- Every word guessed is worth +1 point.
- Every breach of the rules costs -1 point, and the word is discarded.
- The clock stops whenever the guesser wants to take a shot at the word, and starts again with the next one. To stop the timer, either press the pause button or hit the space bar.

5. Passing and rerolling

- The clue-givers get 3 passes per turn: a word that is too hard, or one the guesser simply cannot get to, can be dropped with no penalty — but the clock keeps running.
- Rerolling the word, on the other hand, is unlimited and does not use up a pass. Only use it if a word comes up that has already appeared earlier in the game.

6. End of the game

Once the 60 seconds are up, it is the other team's turn. When both teams have played, whoever scored the most points wins.
